SPECIAL ADVERTISEMENTS

the chief office at a preliminary law, he would not accept the inferior office. But if a leading barrister will not accept a Puisne Judgeship at £2000, because he was making three, four, or five thousand at the Bar, neither would he accept it at £2500 : and if we raise the salaries without getting any better men, we should simply throw away the money. If only second-class men will take the Puisne Judgeships, then Mr. BUTLER'S argument would go to prove that we need only give second-class salaries. Moreover, if prestige counts for much in the case of a barrister giving up practice, then the salary of a Puisne Judge, which does not give the same prestige, ought to have compensation in a more substantial form. But it is not proposed to equalise the salaries of the Judges, or to put them in any different relative position to that in which

There is, too, more force than Mr. BUTLER is willing to allow in the argument of Mr. BAKER, that the leaders of the Bar do not necessarily make the best Judges, or rather, as it would be better to put it, the fact that it would acquire great renown at the Bar are still capable of making very good Judges. It is true, indeed, as MACAULAY somewhere says, that the man who does best, what all his competitors are trying to do well, will probably succeed best in any new task to which he may be suddenly set; and a man who is a first-class leader at the Bar, because he is a man of genius, will be very likely also, because he is a man of genius, to make a good Judge. But then men of genius are rare, and we do not necessarily require

Some hon. members, however, appear to consider that the committee in Mr. BROWN'S case, had exceeded its powers, because the question referred to it was referred illegally. Mr. PUGHAM, for instance, argued that the only questions of disqualification that could be referred to the committee were those arising under the Statute.

failed in time past in getting men who would have been caught for $500 a year more, then we have suffered by not getting them. But if the salaries had been different, how many of the appointments would have been different? Are we suffering now, and is the difficulty of obtaining a competent man to be Paine

Judge at this moment simply a difficulty arising from the inactivity of the salary offered? This is the practical way of looking at the question. If the Bench is, or is likely to be, destitute of available talent because the pay is not equal to the work, the case is clear for raising the salary to a sufficient price.

Altogether apart from the question that Mr. DAVIER raised, however, is the fact that the Constitutional salary of the CHIEF JUSTICE at the present moment is not £2600, and that his pension will not be determined by that amount, but by a lower amount. As we have already intimated, this is a state of things that upon all questions concerning the qualification or disqualification of any person who shall have been returned as a member of the Assembly." There is no limitation here as to time. There is nothing in the words to exclude any case of disqualification arising long after an election. And, as to the spirit of the law, the present actual salaries, and these actual salaries ought to be made the Constitutional salaries, so that every Judge may be assured that his pension will be graduated according to the salary that he has been accustomed to receive, and not according to a lower salary, adopted at an earlier stage of the colour, there is at least as much reason for removing the case of an old member from treatment in the Assembly as for removing that of a new member who would not have formed any political attachments. But, further, the 74th section not only gives directions for the enforcement of the committee's determinations in cases arising under the 8th section, it even gives a right

THE questions raised on Tuesday as to the vacant seat for Hartley were decided in an unsatisfactory manner, and a bad precedent was established upon the occasion. The decision would have been worse had the amendment been adopted.

ment been negatived had a motion to declare the seat vacant been carried, as Mr. ROBERTSON proposed, on the basis of the announcement that Mr. T. Brown had resigned. That would virtually have ignored the action of the Committee of Elections and Qualifications; or rather it tion of contracts for the public service, including persons who hold or enjoy those offices, in the case of sitting or voting in Parliament and the 29th section impose a disability upon "any person under any of the disqualifications mentioned in the last section."

recognized, for no one can design an office of which he has not possession. And the inference would have been that, unless the House had chosen to interfere, Mr. Brown might have retained his seat, without sitting or voting, and have deprived the Harley electors of representation until the lapse of a whole session, in his absence, reading the preceding section with silent awe or vote "whilst so disqualified." It seems to me absurd to suppose that the Legislature would have given the committee the sole power to hear and determine disputes as to qualifications arising at an election should not have intended that the same committee should have the same power in cases of a similar kind arising his seat vacant. For, if Mr. Brown so far held possession of the seat as to have power to resign it, how could the SPEAKER be expected to issue a writ for a new election?

As the SPEAKER had read to the House Mr. Brown's so-called resignation, it became expedient to pass a resolution not only declaring at any time after an election. But the intention is apparent on the face of the statute. The committee can deal with the case of "any sitting member."

In the Assembly, yesterday afternoon, Mr. ROBERTSON made a statement of much public in-the seat vacant, but was signing the true cause of its vacancy. It was expedient to show beyond dispute that the so-called resignation had nothing to do with the matter. It might have been done by affirming that the seat being vacant by reason of the committee's determination that Mr. Brown was disinterested upon the water question. It is satisfactory to see that he distinguishes clearly between the matter of providing temporary relief in the event of a water famine occurring within the next few months, and the adoption of measures to ensure an abundant permanent supply. As to the latter question, it is not the intention of the Government, in the presence of so many conflicting qualified, the SPEAKER ought no longer to refrain from issuing a writ for a new election. But Mr. BUCHANAN, though probably he meant well in moving the amendment which was ultimately carried, did not see the full effect of it. His amendment was, "That the report of the Elections and Qualifications Committee in reference to the seat of the hon. member for Hartley be adopted, and that the seat of the hon. member for Hartley be declared vacant." The passing of this amendment sets aside the so-called resignation as the cause of the vacancy; but it makes the adoption of the committee's report appear to be the cause. Therein the

by passing this amendment the House has virtually declared that the specific determinations of the Elections and Qualifications Committee upon questions referred to it for inquiry, consideration, and report are, like the reports of ordinary committees, to be adopted, or rejected, and discussed upon their merits by the House. The law has made them final, it has made them the sole and sufficient basis of compulsory action in some cases, and of permissive action in others. When the question determined upon arises out of the election of a new member, the action founded upon it is compulsory. When the determination relates to the qualification of a sitting member, the action founded upon it is—in the case of the SPEAKER—permissive. In both instances, however, the determination of the committee, and not any adoption, or approval, or ratification of it by the House, is the ground of action. If the determinations of the committee were not to have their full force unless they were adopted by the House, the effect would be to give the political assembly the right and power to review and override the

A TERRIBLE TORNADO IN KENTUCKY.
February 18.—Last Sunday afternoon, about 3 o'clock, the southern portion of Taylor county was visited by a tornado of extraordinary violence, which occasioned an immense loss of property, and, unfortunately, the full details of the losses are yet unascertained. Full particulars of the great calamity. The fury of the storm almost unaccounted, and the unknown force of the central track of the tornado there is a dreadful scene of ruin and desolation. Fencing, trees, dwellings, out-houses—everything is left to stand before the fierce and cruel onrush of the hurricane. The extent of the damage is not yet ascertained. We hear of the storm passing over two or three miles north of Greensburg, and directly striking the town of Greensburg, but without doing any serious damage, until it reached the vicinity of its fiercest fury seems to have extended from Summersville entirely through Taylor county, and into the northern portion of Boone county. At some points its track was a quarter of a mile, but at others its breadth did not exceed a hundred feet. At one point it was a half mile north-west of Greensburg, where a large crowd of people were gathered to see the winds during the storm, which at this point was very destructive. A falling limb killed the child and broke the arm of a man.

ING OF PARLIAMENT.

The tornado passed within sight of Campbellsville, without doing any damage in town beyond breaching a few windows. From Campbellville out to the Columbia turnpike for some four miles, the destruction was very great. All the houses on the farm of Mrs. Robinson were destroyed.
